MakeBook takes input from students or other users, and adds it to an HTML file in the order you specify. The user types in his/her name, email address, and some text. The program then adds the text to the ongoing story file and allows the user to immediately view his/her entry. You also have options to choose whether to show the date of each submission, the names and email addresses of contributors and whether to email you each submission, and whether or not to require approval of submissions. You may also choose whether new entries should be placed at the beginning of the file or at the end. MakeBook can also be used as a guestbook, where you can moderate entries to help avoid spam.
