The Personal Open Directory calls the Netscape Open Directory (a mirror of the Open Directory Project, and a site which is better networked that ODP itself) to provide you and your users with a Web experience which looks like they've never left your site. It isn't done with homely frames or with the need to parse the huge RDFs from ODP itself, but rather grabbing the data in real-time from NOD. Not only can you customize its output, but if you run or have access to MaxComm and are an Amazon.com Associate, it will automatically add book links to content pages and searches conducted through POD.
